Ron Miller ends his campaign for Maryland Senate

Local Republican drops out of race to challenge 38-year plus General Assembly incumbent and Senate President Thomas V. "Mike" Miller

April 9, 2010 - Prince Frederick, MD -- Community activist, U.S. Air Force veteran and technology executive Ron Miller of Huntingtown announced last month he was suspending his campaign for the Maryland District 27 State Senate seat, citing the need to meet obligations to his family.

In an electronic newsletter sent to his supporters, Miller said, "I am saddened to announce the suspension of my campaign for the Maryland Senate in District 27. I must place a priority on finding work and caring for my family. This is one of the most difficult decisions I've had to make, and I'd welcome your prayers.

"Going forward, I will continue to use my other platforms to speak out on the issues that affect everyday Americans and Marylanders," he said. "For now, I must reorder my priorities and do the first things first."

Miller's campaign declared a suspension to allow time for settling expenses and debts, but the suspension is indefinite and clears the field for another potential challenger to the current Maryland Senate president. The campaign website, TeamRonMiller.com, is being transformed into an online community and media outlet for Miller's continued advocacy of common sense, constitutionally based and citizen centered policies and principles.

Miller is also the executive director of Regular Folks United, a non-profit organization dedicated to the education and advancement of individual liberty and the nation's founding principles, and he will remain in that role.

He will continue as a correspondent for conservative online forums such as Regular Folks United, Red County and Southern Maryland Online, offering his insight on current events and issues from a perspective not covered in the mainstream media. He will also make himself available for television, radio and other media appearances as he has in the past, and is looking to publish his first book, a series of essays on race in America from the perspective of, in his words, "a contrarian black man."

Miller has always been, and will continue to be, an outspoken advocate for free enterprise, low taxes and reasonable regulation, limited and effective government focused on national security, public safety and administering justice, traditional two-parent families and the sanctity of human life.
